Accounting/Finance

At Rockwell Collins, entry-level accountants and financial analysts participate in a job rotation training program. This rotation program provides people with accounting and finance degrees with a variety of work experiences and development opportunities that expose them to various aspects of the Company. Participants typically hold three different positions, with each assignment lasting approximately one year.

Financial positions in the program offer employees a unique perspective into the financial community of Rockwell Collins. Employees are exposed to a variety of experiences, including cost accounting, financial consolidations and reporting, general ledger, corporate tax, internal audit, information technology, budgeting, forecasting, results analysis, and strategic and financial planning. While most participants are located at Corporate headquarters in Cedar Rapids, assignments exist in international and other domestic locations. The Accounting/Finance Rotation Program provides a foundation for employees to build their career path while gaining visibility within the Company. Those who complete the rotation experience are qualified for numerous positions in Accounting and Finance. High-quality financial employees contribute to the overall success of Rockwell Collins.
